I'm sure there's a program for that. I've tried many programs to try to make work more interesting. I think the easiest and most effective way is to take up a hobby. You'll be far more productive if you spend your leisure time on something you're interested in, rather than focusing on work. CyberFocus CyberFocus is a program with a screen-drawing feature. The purpose of the program is to create attractive designs for you to print, as well as make printed photographs. The program allows you to use a variety of professional tools, but the interface is very simple. It does have a Help menu, but to use it you must first understand its functions. The tool set includes tools to brush, airbrush, pencil, and pen. You also get line and curve tool, gradients, textures, and patterns. In addition to making a pretty picture, CyberFocus allows you to make a number of applications. You can change the background color, type, and size of the text. You also can change the size of the picture, and you can even put pictures in frames. There is also a number of templates to use to make your own designs. If you want to get more than just a pretty picture, you can turn it into an application. You can choose from a number of available projects, including a photo frame, calendar, magazine cover, CD, wall map, and a book. CyberFocus requires Windows XP and Windows Vista. Unfortunately, CyberFocus requires that you have an Internet connection to use. The program does not
