Although I'm not a fan of moral relativism, it's one thing to say that there isn't one correct moral view and it's another thing to deny that all views are equally good or equally bad in the absence of a view beyond all. Ideas matter; people matter; truth matters, all the way. Dinesh D'Souza tells us in Illiberal Education (2019) that the most important virtue for a well-educated person is intellectual humility. (I'm not sure why. It's a virtue I'd like to have; I have a lot of work to do.) In none of my classes at any university was I ever required to read a book, or give a lecture, that I had not previously read and thought about. This is by no means universally true of university education. Nevertheless, it's a good thing that it is true. You can't swim alone. Suppose you're drowning, your friends are on the shore yelling that you can save yourself. But you can't. You are too far away. It's too late. They're waving their arms at you. But they can't swim, too. You are on your

I've been trying to enable screenshot recording in Xcode 7. There appears to be a new record screen which is being shown when I navigate to 'Screenshots' > 'Record Screenshots'. It even appears to work for me! Unfortunately I see the following warning/error message: I have enabled iCloud Drive, but I'm certain I've never had to download the app or record a screenshot before. A: So the issue is you're trying to enable 'Instruments' functionality, which require you to enable screenshot/record functionality (However you don't have to enable screenshot/record functionality if you don't use Instruments). If you don't want to enable screenshot/record functionality, then what you have to do is to disable the iCloud functionality in the screenshot 'Summary' (screen shot below) You can click on the 'Erase iCloud' button here to revert the functionality. A: The problem here is that Xcode is asking you to allow access to the pictures you are taking, even if they are only temporary. Apple is doing this because of all the changes in permissions that iOS 8 has brought: The Photos app has a new permission that lets it access your photo library for minor purposes, including recording a screenshot. It does this by getting photos and videos in your photo library, and then applying watermarking, face detection, and other minor adjustments. What are the ramifications? If this happens, you'll have to go into Settings app → iCloud → Photos and Privacy, and tap "Reject" to deny access for apps other than Apple's Photos app. For now, turning off iCloud will solve the problem. You should still be able to take screenshots, though iCloud might slow down the process of accessing your pictures. You can turn off iCloud in your devices' iCloud settings.
