The title of this collection pays tribute to C.L.R. James' contention that the centrality of anti-colonialism in the modern development of the Black world has been sorely neglected and continues to be underestimated in scholarship. The chapters examine some of the key political and philosophical foundations of Black anti-colonialism, as well as activism in areas such as Pan-Africanism, Zionism, Marxism, black literature, and identity, using quantitative and qualitative data from the respective chapters. The volume offers a new understanding of the importance of Black anti-colonialism to understanding the expansion of global capitalism in the twentieth century. As well, it provides an important reference work in the study of colonialism and postcolonialism. "This is a timely collection of essays that fills a void 648931e174

In the majority of industrial and commercial environments, such as high-volume clothing stores, the printing of price tags, tags, and other pricing information on shelves, clothing racks, or other products is performed manually or by expensive overhead or mechanized apparatus. This repetitive process is expensive in labor and in time and cannot typically be accomplished in under a minute for products, such as shirts or other clothing, which may be stacked on shelves four or five high. In the retail environment, it is customary for price tags to be printed at a particular store location by way of a large offset printing press. A typical process for applying such printing to a substrate involves the preparation of a roll of substrate material in the roll form, unwinding the roll and printing the price labels thereon, and re-winding the labels for storage, delivery, and subsequent application to products. There are no automatic systems or methods, known to the inventors, which are capable of printing price tags, labels, price stamps, or other pricing information on a substrate roll in a single pass. An automatic pick/place system, which can pick up a roll of substrate material and place it in an output location or a printer, is a very simple machine to make and does nothing to improve overall production rate. The following patents are representative of those of the prior art which describe systems for printing on paper rolls: U.S. Pat. No. 3,993,643 entitled "Indexing Apparatus" issued to Latzke; U.S. Pat. No. 4,005,437 entitled "Computer-Controlled Printed Label Printing System" issued to Granlund; U.S. Pat. No.
