"The Elden Ring is an MMORPG where, in the game's most significant feature, you can freely leave the world of Warcraft and enter the Lands Between, a world unaffected by the war between the Elden and the Orcs. You can easily take the lead of a guild, create your own character, and perform various quests in tandem with other players in order to become an Elden Lord. We have also introduced plenty of new elements to enrich and deepen the online play experience, as well as new content that has been created especially for this title." Q: How to set the proportion of stripes in a galaxy? Is there a simple and reliable way to set the proportion of stripes (or maybe fans) in a galaxy? I want a more or less random distribution, I mean that there will be no 5 columns of 2, 4, 5 and 8 rows. AFAIK, there is no way to produce an image that prints everything manually in a grid (being said, by itself, print, paper and ink are simply expensive). A: It is likely you can make this happen with randomness. Now the problem is that there are a few choices in randomness. For example, you could generate a closed curve (e.g. a circle) and taper your stripes off from it. The problem with this is that you'll be tweaking your angle the whole time and you'll have a lot of excess material which you'll need to discard. Other options include having 2D circles (where the radius decreases linearly) as the center of your galaxy. The problem with this is that you'll have a lot of overplotted material which you may not want. It is possible to combine the 2D circles with spirals. For instance, we have a "concentric spiral" (Google it), where the angle of the spiral decreases linearly inwards (and outward). So if you want a constantly decreasing spiral, you can simply have a circle as the center of your galaxy, with a fixed number of stripes and a fixed amount of spiral. You can then taper your spiral as you go. If you want a more random distribution, you can generate a closed loop and then taper off the spiral. There are a lot of formulas for generating random closed loops. Anyway, this is a bit of a pain and you may want to just use a normal closed curve or a 2D circle.

However, I think this is the best solution (as it gives you freedom of shape) A: Pretend you have a sheet of paper. On it, place a virtual rectangle with the size of the simulation window. Draw a perfect circle in the middle of the rectangle and cut it out, as if you had a perfectly flat rectangle within a rectangle. This is a sheet of the galaxy you want, but without dark and light regions. Now, by slightly deforming the shape of the rectangle, you can make a normal rectangular sheet with a spiral cutout. bff6bb2d33
