[Genetic homogeneity of 19 autosomal STRs in the Hebei Han ethnic group]. To investigate the genetic homogeneity of 19 autosomal STRs in Han populations. The genetic homogeneity of 19 autosomal STRs was investigated in 1035 unrelated Han individuals from Hebei province in China. The genotype data were analyzed with the PowerPlex 16 System. The 19 STR loci showed 100% overall genotype match, and the genetic diversity ranged from 0.380 to 0.960. The homogeneity was very high. There were 388 unique haplotypes and no locus was in Hardy-Weinberg equilibrium. Through gene diversity analysis, the recombination rate for all linked loci was 0.1938. The 19 autosomal STRs were proved to be highly polymorphic loci in Han population and STRs could be used as genetic markers for forensic practice in Hebei Han Ethnic group.Q: How to prevent debugger to warn us about code too old? When using a .NET 3.5 program on .NET 4.0 (for example), the debugger (I'm using JetBrains' Rider) will warn us about all the erroneous code in the 3.5 project. This seems like a good idea, but in our case, we have a huge project with lots of libraries, and many of these libraries are so old that the code below them has already been removed. For example, our latest version of log4net has been removed, although it exists in the 3.5 version. But the Visual Studio "Configuration Properties" window still shows this (unnecessary) warning in the projects that use it. How can I get rid of these warnings? A: For those with at least VS 2018 version 16.2 or better, .NET 4.
