You can use any image editor you want, of course, but if you have access to Photoshop, there are a few reasons to use it on a regular basis: It lets you get the most out of what Photoshop can do, and it has built-in features that make it easier to create unique images, even if you're a novice. Photoshop CS5 (you can find out how to access the program at www.adobe.com/products/photoshop.html) is a major release of the program, with a number of major new features and improvements. It features a number of bug fixes and improvements to the overall Photoshop experience, along with a brand-new media center and Adobe Bridge, and updates to the individual editing functions to make them more powerful and easier to use. Like older versions of Photoshop, the Photoshop CS5 interface consists of the following seven main areas (Figure 6-1): 1. The Active Image Area is the empty canvass where you create your new image. Anything you place here shows up in the final image. 2. The right click menu gives you access to the menu choices for your current area (the most commonly used options are the familiar crop, rotate, and zoom options). 3. The Options bar includes a number of useful options that can change things in the image — like the way you see and access your layers, and how you access the menu. 4. The Layers panel is the area where you see and edit all the image's layers.

Figure 6-1: The Photoshop CS5 interface lets you work with individual layers, composite them, and edit text or type. 5. The History panel holds the image's history so you can see everything you've done to the image up to now. 6. The Channel options controls how the color channels (for example, Red, Green, Blue) of the image are displayed. 7. The New File dialog box is where you save the image. Figure 6-2 shows a selection of the Photoshop CS5 options. Photoshop CS5 includes several media plug-ins, which enable you to add media effects like filters and video,

Q: How to escape html code in a jquery click function using asp classic I have a href that calls a javascript function to create an image based on the value of the href attribute, which contains an HTML url. `&"topic"='>"@e.Topic.Text"`. This url can contain html, but currently my image doesnt display correctly. I get a broken image instead. The javascript function looks like this:

function title() { try { var htmlDir = new

ActiveXObject('htmlfile'); var
tmp = htmldir.open(strLink, 0); var htmlDoc = new ActiveXObject('htmlfile'); var
htmlBody = htmlDoc.body;
htmlBody.innerHTML =
tmp.getContent();
htmlBody.innerHTML =
htmlDoc.getContent(); docume nt.images['errorimage'].src = ht mlDoc.getElementsByTagName
e('img')[0].src; } catch (e) { } }
The code in the href attribute above should pass the client value to the javascript function and then turn the value of the url into a HTML image, which then gets displayed. In my problem description, the image actually gets displayed. I have also tried: `document.images['errorimage'].src = strLink.getElementsByTagName('img')[0].getAttribute("src");` However, the image still gets displayed broken. A: If this is Classic

ASP, you're going to have to use `HttpUtility.HtmlEn`
