In T cells, TNF-alpha is the cytokine critical in septic shock. The Glucocorticoid Receptor (GR) has been implicated as an intracellular regulator of TNF-alpha expression by virtue of its ability to bind to a DNA element within the TNF-alpha promoter. To be effective, a ligand must have the capacity to interact with the receptor and may need to function in the context of other regulatory proteins. Whether the ligand is a hormone or a synthetic peptide is not critical as long as it retains the capacity to interact with the receptor and to demonstrate regulation of downstream signalling. In the experiments described here, the GR was expressed in COS-1 cells and used to investigate the capacity of a 23-residue peptide (peptide 1) derived from its N-terminal region to regulate TNF-alpha expression. Induction of TNF-alpha expression in COS-1 cells by the dexamethasone-GR complex was concentration dependent and found to be within a physiologically relevant range. In vitro transcription of TNF-alpha mRNA was dose-dependently down-regulated by peptide 1. In addition, 100 microM peptide 1 reduced the TNF-alpha response to 10 nM dexamethasone by approximately
