I'm having a debate with a coworker and it seems like his idea of organization of the code base is quite unsophisticated. I've been doing C++ and Java development and most projects are on a small scale. I have my source code all mashed up into one big mess in a random CVS directory, and have no idea of where to find anything. Other than that, I'm totally used to the space/time tradeoff of finding solutions. I don't have any code to show because I haven't had any time to touch this code in a while, and it's not in any critical place (if you're sick of me saying this, feel free to take a look at my GitHub account for.NET/Mono development and see the project I'm currently working on). I'd like to preface this with, I am a capable C++/Java developer, and this is more of a rant about how I feel about working with 6d1f23a050
