Long-Term Outcomes of Patients With Transverse Myelitis After Pediatric Stem Cell Transplant. We report long-term outcomes of patients who had received hematopoietic stem cell transplant (HSCT) during their first episode of pediatric myelitis. We reviewed the medical records of 17 consecutive patients who were referred for the first time for evaluation for myelitis after receiving HSCT between 1989 and 2010. Nine patients had received myeloablative conditioning and 8 patients had received reduced-intensity conditioning. The mean time to evaluation for myelitis was 42.3 months (range 1.3-190.2 months) after HSCT. The mean follow-up duration after HSCT was 8.2 years (range 1.4-19.3 years). At last follow-up, 12 patients (71%) had complete recovery of transverse myelitis (myelitis that has disappeared completely). Three patients had persistent neurological impairment. Five patients had relapses during follow-up. The mean time to first relapse after HSCT was 3.7 years (range 2.3-7.7 years). The clinical presentations at first relapse included motor weakness (n = 4), sensory impairment (n = 3), sensory ataxia (n = 3), and cranial nerve palsy (n = 1). Two patients who had relapsed during follow-up died because of their relapses. Our results showed that the relapse rates and overall survival were both lower in this study than in previous reports of long-term outcomes in adults. Our results support earlier studies that showed that pediatric HSCT might be beneficial in patients with transverse myelitis. Manfaat (,) is an old Persian word meaning "welfare". 6d1f23a050
