As a big fan of DAZ Studio myself, I just have to comment on this. Here in Australia, we have a lot of issues with the Australian version of Studio over the internet. This would make life a lot easier for so many of us. Brilliant. While the price of Paint3D is in the region of $59, DAZ 3D offers a 40% discount off the retail price. Over three years I worked in the 3D design industry. I was proficient with sculpting in Zbrush, and specialized in designing digital renders of new projects. I left the industry three years ago to pursue my long term love of making stuff, in the hope it would bring me back to the 3D world that I began working in. My first 3D design project was just that, a piece of furniture. The idea behind it was that it could be used as a display piece, or as a shelf. I needlessly bought a sewing machine to do the piece, but when I finished and looked at the product as a whole, it needed a touch up, so I could see if it really got the job done. It did! It's held up so well that it's actually probably my favorite thing I've made. Through this experience, I learned a lot, not just the difference between Zbrush and Paint3D, but painting in general. This started me down a path towards art, and a love of blue, and who doesn't love blue? I currently spend my time designing, writing, and producing content. I'm continually pushing my limits, experimenting with new ideas, and in turn trying to help others to do the same. I've learned a lot over the past six years. Being in 3D for that amount of time, and having the sort of career that I did, helped me gain the confidence to want to share what I've
